

ABSTRACT

A dry-paint film for application to a component includes a support material, at least one pigmented paint layer and, if optionally, a top layer, in particular a transparent top layer. The paint layer includes two layers. The first layer, facing the support material, is applied to the support material by knife coating, rolling, pouring or printing, while the second layer is coated onto the first layer by atomization of the coating material.